Interactive directory makes it easy to discover new instant messenger and video chat buddies on all major clients

Sherman Oaks, California – July 12, 2011 – Just in time for the addition of video chat features to Facebook and Google, the directory VideoChatBuddyFinder.com officially launches today, making it easy to find people on the services and make new social, business, and romantic connections.

On the site, users can create a free profile, listing their screen name(s) for any of the major IM/video chat clients, including Skype, AOL Instant Messenger, Windows Live, Facetime, iChat, ooVoo, Google Talk, and Yahoo Messenger, as well as any personal data they wish to share, such as age, gender, location, and even their astrological sign.

Once their profile is complete, users can search for like-minded individuals, making uses of 13 different search filters and four different areas: networking, dating, relationships, and friends. Creating a profile also allows other VCBF users to find and add them to their contacts list.

“Just think of VCBF as an instant messenger and video chat ‘telephone book’ filled with folks also looking to gain more contacts,” says owner and creator Kenneth Williams.

During the BETA launch, people have already reported success stories, starting new romantic relationships, finding business partners, and locating people in other countries to practice speaking a foreign language with, and the company expects to hear about more as the directory grows. VideoChatBuddyFinder.com is currently accepting new members.

About VideoChatBuddyFinder.com

VideoChatBuddyFinder™ is a free service that allows you to list your video chat screen names so that you can be found in our directory by like-minded individuals. VCBF also gives our users the opportunity to search our directory for people they'd like to add to their favorite video chat buddy list. What a great way to meet new people!
